Ongoing platform management with qualitative and quantitative evaluations

Continual monitoring and rebalancing is pivotal to every fund's success. Our research is ongoing and conducted simultaneously, in several ways:

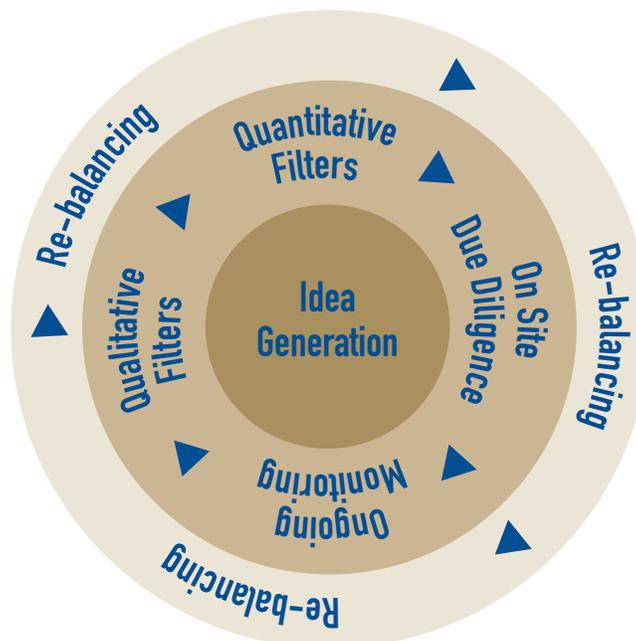

Rigorous assessment of our pool of investment managers ensures that we understand the source of their added value, their management style and the risks embedded in their portfolios. Qualitative and quantitative analysis are used to determine whether performance is deviating from the manager's style and stated objectives, and managers are met with on a quarterly basis to review results and any updates of note about the firm, the team or the strategy.

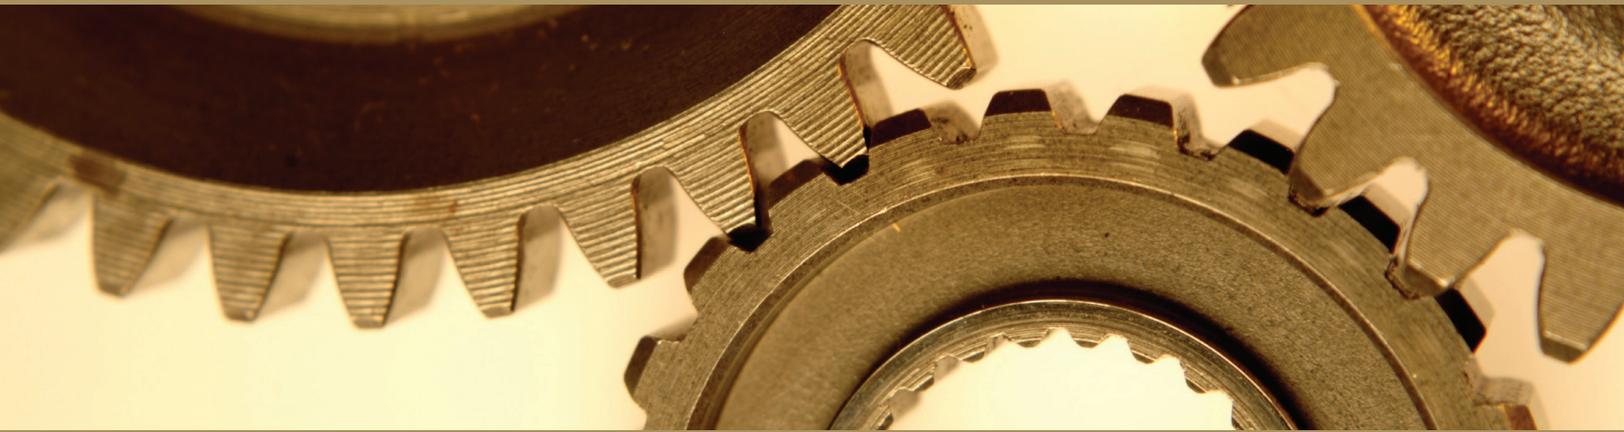

Onsite due diligence visits enable T.E. Wealth to assess a given organization's strengths. In depth face-to-face meetings with key investment professionals are an integral part of our process as we review investment approaches and risk controls. We want to assess company stability, understand their long-term business plan and see evidence of growth in their assets.

Quantitative filters identify high-performance managers who have consistently delivered attractive, risk-adjusted returns. We focus on a number of key metrics such as added value, volatility of returns, tracking error relative to market activity, information ratio and active share. We also examine whether a portfolio is dominated by a single sector, and what risk controls are in place to limit the exposure to that market segment.

Qualitative filters assess the company behind the investment manager. These filters identify organizational issues, high key staff turnover, how research is conducted, how rigorous the investment process is, and who ultimately makes the buy/sell decisions. Succession plans, compensation structures and whether there is adequate personnel to support business growth are also considered.
