SunProtectionConference

The 15th edition of the Sun Protection conference series will take place on the 4-5 June 2019.

The consumer has difficulty in understanding the industry's current sun protection message. The Royal Pharmaceutical Society's survey found that SPF and UVA were not well understood by the normal sunscreen user and they called for a simpler more meaningful message. Added to this is the new recommendation to the public to expose their unprotected skin for short periods during the summer months to allow Vitamin D production.

The industry itself is not always clear in its message to the consumer. The more recent and controversial areas of infra-red, blue light and visible light further complicate the sun protection message. New areas of sun protection may be good for marketing products, but are they just 'hype' or is there a serious biological need for this extended protection?

Together with the world's scientific authorities in sun protection, the conference will examine and discuss the issues of which wavelengths we should be protecting against, how they will be tested, what is the regulatory position, what claims we should be making and what message we should be sending to the product users in terms of sun exposure and protection.

The conference programme is organised by Jack Ferguson, Director of Skinnovations Ltd, UK

Jack Ferguson obtained a BSc honours degree in Biology with Chemistry and a PhD in Bioengineering, both from Strathclyde University, Glasgow. He has worked in the cosmetics industry for over 20 years. After spending some time with Beecham Products in Leatherhead, he moved to the Boots Company in Nottingham, where he worked for 15 years. His final responsibilities were as Head of R&D Services, Boots Contract Manufacturing. During his time there he was joint developer and promoter of the Boots UVA star rating system.

From Boots, Jack moved to Oriflame International, Dublin, and was R&D Director there for five years, before leaving in 2000 to set up a new company, Skinnovations Ltd. Skinnovations provide contract product development services for clients and focus on sun and skin care products and also on product claims support for advertising. Jack also works as cosmetics consultant for ITV, providing technical and scientific advice on claims support for television scripts in advance of broadcasting. He has been active in the Cosmetic Trade associations, particularly in the sun care area, and was the chairman of the Colipa 'Sun Protection Measurement' TF 1990-1998 and chairman at the time the Colipa SPF test was developed and published.
