Northern Petroleum executive director Chris Foss leaves company

Northern Petroleum (LON:NOP) announced that Chris Foss has left his position on the company's board.

This comes amid a series of changes at senior management level, which has included the appointment of new chief executive Keith Bush following Derek Musgrove's retirement.

Foss had been with the company for around ten years. In that time had been finance director and more recently executive director for legal and commercial matters.

"I am proud of my contribution to Northern's progress since joining when it was a £3mln market cap company in January 2003," Foss said in a statement.

"I wish Keith every success in driving the company forward on behalf of all shareholders in his new role as CEO, and would also like to personally thank both past and present members of the wider Northern team, a number of whom have put in many years of service, for their hard work and assistance over the years."
