

Description

The Surf Lid was the original design from Gecko Head Gear. It was designed for the need to keep our heads warm in the British winters and protected from the rocks hiding below the surface.

It quickly was adopted as the helmet to use by body boarders, windsurfers, kite surfers, surf kayakers and anyone else who wanted the protection in the water, spreading to wake boarding, river kayakers and even skydivers as the close fit and tough shell was always a bonus for protecting their most valuable asset.

Design

Knowing it's life was going to be spent in the bottom of a wetsuit bucket the shell was made from fiberglass and the materials used in the liner and strap were designed to avoid soaking up water. The ability to rinse the whole helmet under a tap meant that you can easily rinse the salt water off the helmet the same time you rinse your suit.

The inflatable liner which grew and shrunk to give you a perfect 100% custom fit each time you wore meant it gave you comfortable fit for hours of wear without any pressure points from wearing a helmet for a long time. The fit can also be adjusted while you're wearing it using the red valve to reduce or increase the pressure dependent on the situation.
