

ON SACRED GROUND | Bass Lake, California

A modest 2,569 square feet, the Meyer's Cabin features two prominent gables, one facing the street, the other looking over the creek, giving the house both a public and private face. Inside, the Idaho white pine walls and impressive western larch logs in the ceiling give the home that "warm cozy" feeling that the owner desired. An arched doorway, echoing the cylindrical shape of the building materials, leads from the kitchen into the master bedroom. The home has three bedrooms plus a loft, making it possible to sleep 10 people.

Before building, we did our homework and flew to Washington and Idaho to visit log home companies and builders. We were most impressed with Brian Schafer (president of Edgewood Log Structures) in Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. It was a meeting of the minds. In Brian, I saw the same relentless commitment to detail that I myself possess, and my wife saw a log home company that could take her sketches and tear sheets and transform them into a one-of-a-kind home design.
