JF Mimic announce a new development in their product offering: SaaS - Software as a Service

JF Mimic, part of the James Fisher Group of companies, have developed their product range, especially for the commercial shipping marketing, with the introduction of the 'Software as a Service' offering.

“Due to the current economic climate, and our continual review and development policy, we decided a fresh approach was needed to aid shipowners to make the right choice for their maintenance strategy. The JFM SaaS solution enables shipowners and operators to increase the effectiveness of their maintenance regime at minimal initial costs” says Ruth Harvey, Sales & Marketing Executive.

The Mimic SaaS offering is a modern take on traditional SaaS, allowing merchant fleets to subscribe to the Mimic Software for an agreed term and receive remote analysis of their data.

“The low cost entry level will be appreciated by large fleets that would have considerable up-front costs when adopting CMB strategies” says Graeme Brown, Sales Director. Instead, the software would be installed as part of the service which would extend over 3 or 5 years. End-users will enjoy full support and engineering services for a monthly fee per vessel.

The data collected onboard would be sent to Mimic HQ in Manchester or via the shore-based Mimic system at the shipowner’s office. The data would be analysed by Mimic engineers and shipowners will be sent a full report providing explanations of fault indicators and corresponding recommendations where appropriate.
