

Why Is Interoperability Important?

- Reduces operational cost and complexity
- Enables “best-of-breed” deployments
- Leverages existing investments

Benefits

- Improve patient care specially for Chronic patients
- Better Access of Patient Records
- It allows different systems and applications to communicate with one another
- Fewer outages, large and small, due to better system monitoring, analysis, and management
- Faster service restoration following an outage, due to the availability of better information about outage locations and causes, the availability of interchangeable parts, and high-speed, automated system operations
- Better resource adequacy because interoperability enables better integration of diverse supply and demand-side resources, and substitution of demand-side reductions for supply resources.
