What is value for money...

Being treated with dignity and respect?

Being able to fulfil your potential?

Receiving regular clinical assessments?

Spending less hard cash?

Or all of the above?

At The Richardson Partnership for Care, we provide a person-centred approach for rehabilitation and treatment for adults with acquired brain injuries and learning difficulties.

The Richardson Partnership for Care provides a residential care package to meet the needs of the individual, ensuring they have the level of care and support they need. Our multi-disciplinary support team includes Consultant Clinical Psychologists, Assistant Psychologists, Neuro-Psychiatrist, Physiotherapists, Occupational Therapists and Speech & Language Therapists. And our inclusive pricing model means that budgeting is straightforward and predictable.

A better quality of life

With over 20 years of experience in specialist residential care for people with acquired brain injuries and learning difficulties, our homes provide a unique environment. They have a warm, positive and friendly atmosphere, and are buildings with character, designed and decorated like a home – not an institution. Combined with the high level of specialist support that we provide, we find that even people with the most challenging behaviour make very good progress.

Our long history in supporting individuals has taught us that one size does not fit all and has led us to develop our homes to accommodate people in a variety of ways, for example, traditional homes or transitional suites. We have a strong ethic that environment and social inclusion are at the heart of fulfilment.

Value for money

Our experience has shown that an inclusive care package, with the right level of clinical psychology provision for the individual, leads to continual and successful rehabilitation. It can often prevent the need for crisis care, which is not only unplanned and very expensive, but causes set-backs in the individual's progress, causing higher long-term costs.
